Poetics Of The New American Poetry

Donald Allen Warren Tallman

List of famous American poets with their biographies that include trivia, interesting facts, timeline and life history. Poetry, the panacea for worldly tedium, has inspired generations to greatness. Over the years America, the goldmine of poetic talent, has produced literary bards like Robert Frost, Edgar Allan Poe, Pablo Neruda, and Emily Dickinson, whose poems are read and cherished to this day by connoisseurs and layman alike. Whether you understand the iambic pentameter or not or appreciate the use of caesura, you will surely love going through the biographies, trivia and facts of these famous American poets who gave poetry its own niche. American poetry has been directly influenced by mass media and electronic technology. Films, videotapes, and tape recordings of poetry readings and interviews with poets have become available, and new inexpensive photographic methods of printing have encouraged young poets to self-publish and young editors to begin literary magazines of which there are now well over 2,000. From the late 1950s to the present, Americans have been increasingly aware that technology, so useful in itself, presents dangers through the wrong kinds of striking images. Unlike the Beat and San Francisco poets, the poets of the New York School are not interested in overtly moral questions, and, in general, they steer clear of political issues. They have the best formal educations of any group. Her Piano by Carol Lynn Grellas. To Live in the Borderlands by Gloria Anzaldúa. Prose from Poetry Magazine. American Poetry in the New Century. By John Barr. Introduction. (The centennial calendar does not go further back. The early years of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries did not mark new departures for English poetry. And American poetry found its true beginnings in Whitman and Dickinson, who did their writing in the middle of the nineteenth century, not at either end.) But it's not really a matter of calendar. American poetry is ready for something new because our poets have been writing in the same way for a long time now. There is fatigue, something stagnant about the poetry being written today. If “The New American Poetry” was not quite the revolutionary document its editor and its contributors expected it to be, there is little question that it was a landmark dividing an accepted chronology of excellence from a tentative and disputable one. It brought into prominence the large talents of Denise Levertov, Robert Creeley and the late Paul Blackburn at the same time it gave a look of respectability to a number of spaced-out lyricists from San Francisco and its psychedelic environs.
