Content

Chapter 1  Introduction  1-46

1.1 Historical Background

1.2 Canadian Literature: A Brief Survey
   1.2.1 From 1620 To 1867
   1.2.2 From 1867 To 1914
   1.2.3 From 1914 To 1941
   1.2.4 From 1941 To 1959
   1.2.5 From 1959 To 1985
   1.2.6 From 1985 onwards –

1.3 Aboriginal Canadian Literature

1.4 Confederation Poetry

1.5 Characteristics of Canadian Literature
   1.5.1 Quest for Self-Identity
   1.5.2 Failure and futility
   1.5.3 Humour and wit
   1.5.4 Mild anti-Americanism
   1.5.5 Multiculturalism
   1.5.6 Role of the Nature
   1.5.7 Satire and Irony
1.5.8  The underdog hero

1.5.9  Urban vs. rural

1.5.10  The Stereotyping of Native Peoples

1.5.11  Double Voicing-Double Consciousness

1.6  Ethnicity: Conceptual History and Definitions

1.7  Ethnicity and Nationality

1.8  Ethnicity and Race

1.9  Multiculturalism

1.10  Gender Studies

1.11  Gender Studies and Psychoanalytic Theory

1.12  Women's studies

1.12.1  First wave Feminism

1.12.2  Second Wave Feminism

1.12.3  Third Wave Feminism

1.13  Cultural Studies

1.14  Post-Colonial Studies

1.15  Significance of Ethnicity and Gender to Literature

Emily Pauline Johnson: Life and Works

Selected Publications

Objectives of the Study

Hypothesis
Chapter 2 Displacement, Intertribal Warfare and Bloodthirstiness: A critical analysis of the poetry collections The White Wampum, Canadian Born, and In The Shadows 47-85

2.1 Introduction

2.2 Themes
2.2.1 Intertribal warfare/ bloodthirstiness
2.2.2 Lament on the loss of land and animals
2.2.3 Native American Identity
2.2.4 Philosophical Inclination
2.2.5 Spirituality
2.2.6 Element of Folklore
2.2.7 Portrayal of Landscape
2.2.8 Alienation
2.2.9 Gender Exaltation

Conclusion

Works Cited

Chapter 3 Integration of Native Culture and History: A critical analysis of the poetry collections, Flint and Feather and When George Was King and Other Poems 86-129

3.1 Introduction

3.2 Themes
3.2.1 Love
3.2.2 Attachment to the Land
3.2.3 Celebrating Past and Shaping Future
3.2.4 Johnson as a Poet of Manscape

3.3 Poetic Devices

3.3.1 Figures of Speech
3.3.2 Rhyming schemes
3.3.3 Diction
3.3.4 Motif
3.3.5 Symbolism
3.3.6 Tension in Poetry
3.3.7 Archetype of Literature

3.4 Archetype in E. Pauline Johnson’s Poetry

Works Cited

Chapter 4 Stories: A Vehicle for the Conveyance of Cultural Knowledge and Societal Values: A critical analysis of the reflection of Gender and Ethnicity in The Moccasin Maker, The Shagganappi, and Legends of Vancouver

4.1 Introduction

4.2 Gender Bias

4.3 Themes: The Moccasin Maker
4.3.1 Combination of Romance and Resistance
4.3.2 Indian Women: Ceaseless Source of Love for their Natural and Adopted Children
4.3.3 Attraction to and Repulsion from Christianity

4.4 Ethnic Segregation and Class Conflict: Shagganappi
4.4.1 Upbringing of Indian Boys
4.4.2 Sacrifice
4.4.3 Sense of Responsibility
4.4.4  Passion for Art, Dance, and Music
4.4.5  Love for Animals and Birds
4.4.6  Knowledge of Medicinal Plants
4.4.7  Risking lives for White Brothers
4.4.8  Exhibition of Rare Courage, Devotion, and Determination
4.4.9  Love for Love, Blood for Blood
4.4.10 Religious Insight
4.4.11 Hero-Worshiping
4.4.12 Economically Determined Power and the Status Order

4.5 The Legends: Description of Extraordinary Past Events: The Legends of Vancouvers
4.5.1 Gender Exaltation
4.5.2 Attachment to the Land
4.5.3 Intertribal Warfare
4.5.4 Combination of History and Myth
4.5.5 Moral Lesson: Virtue Rewards- Vice gets punished

Works Cited

Chapter 5  Conclusion  240-267

5.1 Introduction
5.2 Observations
5.3 Scope for Further Research

Works Consulted  268-274
The goal of these few pages is to make a liberal argument for the continuing importance of these distinctly illiberal journals in the legal academy. Feminist journals clearly do not fit comfortably with prevailing liberal democratic values. Contemporary liberalism defines membership in the political community in strictly gender-neutral terms. One might even say that this principle of gender neutrality reflects liberalism's core mission to eliminate group-based exclusions to citizenship in favor of a principle of universal equal treatment. We are in contact with gender critical feminists in the UK and Canada; the United States, Australia, France, South Korea, Portugal, Argentina, Nigeria, and more. There is an international community of gender critical feminists because we are all fighting a lot of the same battles. We support each other; commiserate, celebrate, and share resources. We are just like any other community.